THANKSGIVING DAY IN THE NAVY

Santa Fe

December 4th, 1916.

December 4th, 1916,

your local agent.

Uncle Sam's Sailors Have All Sorts of Fun on Thanksgiving.

HANKSGIVING day in the navy isn't what it used to be! But neither officer nor enlisted man states the fact with reminiscent adness of tone. For many years ago, and many years less than that, and, indeed, until very recent years, the Plymouth Rock anniversary was day anticipated for months ahead because it would bring turkey and "trimmings" to every man aboard ship in the navy. But now-well, the sailormen are not any less patriotic, only they have such improved food conditions that a holiday has lost some of its desirabilities, at least from a culinary standpoint.

In every other respect Thanksgiving day is just as longingly anticipated, for greater freedom is allowed the men, and events, unheard of in the "old days," enliven the ship during the forenoon and after dinner and tea

All sorts of athletic contests possible to the floating gymnasium are indulged in and more than one promising "White Hope" has made his debut at a holiday bout.

From the time they turn out every man abourd feets a tangible difference in the day. No matter what the weather conditions-whether they be ···· near the equator or plowing about icecrusted seas-it is Thanksgiving day to various and there will be "doings."

Every vessel of the navy must be kept ship-shape and for this purpose about a fourth of the men are told off to look after the absolutey necessary routine, such as cleaning, scrubbing, cooking and accomplishing the thousand and one odd jobs a man-ofwar is always providing.

Whenever it is possible men are permitted to go home for Thanksgiving, and of course their "Day" becomes an individual holiday, but the majority simply go ashore for a jollification, a theater or a football gameif the fleet is in any home port-or for whatever happens to be provided by "the natives" of a foreign port at that time.

Of course the claborateness of the day's exercises depends upon the talent of the crew and the size of the ship. Athletic rivalry is often intense among various vessels of the fleet, and when one possesses an especially clever boxer, or fox trotter, or pie ester, or singer, the others are sure to learn it-there is no hilling of lights under bushels at such times-and his ability lends added luster to the pro-

Thanksgiving Day a Window.

Hannah More says of praise that it is the only employment in which self has no part. Surely on one day in the year, if no more, the Lora to narvest and the nation's God should be re membered. Like the chapel in a hos pice on Mount Sinai, in which is one window so located that the sun shines through it only on a single day in every year, so on Thanksgiving day, at teast, light enough should ray into every soul to show how good God is.
